Hannah focuses her practice on defending the financial services industry and representing parties in complex commercial actions.

Hannah comes to SHMG with significant legal experience in litigation and negotiations, having previously worked as an Associate focusing on domestic relations cases. Additionally, during her time in law school, Hannah was a member of DePaul University College of Law's Moot Court Society and competed in two National Moot Court Competitions. Through her participation in competitions during law school and her previous practice in domestic relations, Hannah has developed and sharpened her skills in advanced legal research, critical thinking, brief writing, and oral advocacy. These skills carry directly into Hannah's everyday practice, allowing her to craft compelling arguments and present them with confidence before judges, arbitrators, and mediators alike.

Prior to attending law school, Hannah received her degree in Finance from Illinois State University, which provides her with a solid foundation in understanding complex financial issues. Hannah brings a well-rounded skill set to her practice, drawing not only from her legal practice experience, but also from her background in finance.

When she's not practicing law, Hannah enjoys hanging out with her husband and their dog, taking spin classes, traveling, and trying out new restaurants in Chicago.
